Research Analysis

The introduced measure permits school districts to offer a remediation course for high school students who score below nineteen on the ACT exam.

Fiscal Analysis

HB 1790, as introduced, allows for each school district to offer a remediation course for high school students who score below a nineteen on the American College Testing exam. A teacher providing such instruction does not have to be certified in any subject matter tested in the exam. There is no fiscal impact if this is not offered.
