Fiscal Analysis

As written, the measure is subject to the availability of funds. The measure stipulates that students in grade twelve shall be administered career-readiness assessments at no cost to the student. If resources are allocated to fund the program, it has been determined the approximate cost for such a program would be $727,560 - $889,240. This estimate is based upon the number of high school seniors taking the assessments as calculated by the Department of Career and Technology Education using available data.
